WALT WHITMAN'S FUNERAL

It Will Take Place Wednesday According to His Own Directions.

His Death Occurred Saturday at His Home in Camden, N. J.

CAMDEN, N. J., March 28.—Preparations are being completed for the funeral of Poet Walt Whitman, who died at his home Saturday evening. The ceremonies will be very simple and will take piace at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, in the open air if the weather per-mits, at the tomb in Harleigh Cometery. The tomb was designed and built by the poet several years ago, and he left instruc-tions as to the manner in which the burnal services should be conducted. These will be carried out, if possible, in every detail. There will be no clergyman to officiate, but extracts from the Psaims and selections from his own works and those of other poets will be read by some of his friends. It is expected Robert G. Ingersoll and Dr. R. M. Buck, who is Walt Whitman's biographer, as well as by Wednesday morning the body of Mr. White man will lie in state at his house, and an opportunity will be given to all desiring it to take a last look at the graud features of the the head, face, chest and hands by Thomas and Wilfiam R. O'Donovan, the sculptor, of

An autonsy was performed vesterday, cause of the objections made by George Whitman, the poet's brother. He thought that such an examination would not satisfy any scientific end, but was simply asked to to gratify the professional curiosity of the before his death, had consented to an autopsy, and has promised his brain to the Anthropometric Society, of which he was a member It is understood that the Society will claim it. Drs. Alexander McAllister and Daniel Longacre made the post-mortem examination. It sed the fact that Whitman's left lung was entirely gone, and only a breathing spot remained in the right. Three quarts of water were taken from the cavity about the heart, and a number of small abscesses were found upon the corresponding were taken from the cavity about the heart, and a number of small abscesses were found upon that organ.

The mysterious pains which the poet has suffered for years in his left side were found to have been occasionned by peritonitis. The brain was abnormally large, and was found to be in a healthy condition.

The decetors say that the body of the poet was one of the most splendinly developed specimens of physical manhood they had ever seen. The immediate cause of his death was believed to be the attack of pneumonia, from which he suffered early in the Winter, and from which he never railed completely.

The tomb where he is to be buried is constructed of massive granite blocks set into a hilside in Harleigh Cemetery, in the out-skirts of Camden. The spot was selected by the poet, and he often used to go there and sit in the Summer time.

It is in the midst of a little grove, and overlooks a swiftly running brock, which is naif hidden by the overhanging foliage of the trees. At the top is the simple inscription, "Walt Whitman."

The bodies of his father and mother, who e buried in Brooklyn, will be exhuned and seed in this tomb beside his own, in accordance with his wish.
